Geek Squad Summer Academy at Mother McAuley Liberal Arts High School

Geek Squad and Mother McAuley High School teamed up once again to bring “Geek Squad Summer Academy” to local young women in 7th through 12th grades. Three years ago, Mother McAuley was the only site of the inaugural Academy, which is now hosted by Geek Squad Corporation in locations across the nation.

Geek Squad developed the Summer Academy as a way of showing young women the opportunities a career in technology has to offer. During this three-day camp, students experienced a wide assortment of computer based subjects while having fun playing with technology. Geek Squad Agents taught students the basics of computer building, networking, digital imaging, and internet communication all through hands-on, interactive learning. A few of the week’s highlights included Band Hero, Wiilympics, and music composition on Macs.

The campers were also treated to a mini-training session with members of the Chicago Fire Major League Soccer Team. The Chicago Fire players demonstrated some soccer drills which the students were able to try out. They also signed autographs and visited the classroom to see the projects the campers were working on during the Academy. Geek Squad’s parent company, Best Buy, is a sponsor for the Chicago Fire.
